Veolia Environnement relies on Deutsche Telekom and the FreeMove Alliance for innovative services

In 2011, Veolia Environnement generated revenue of 129.6 billion.

The requirements

Due to the long-term, global focus of its core business operations, Veolia Environnement pursues an innovative, centralized procurement strategy. While attractive and transparent conditions are important criteria in the company's purchasing decisions, they are not alone: Another important requirement is the ability of its partner to provide integrated mobile communication services worldwide, such as unified communications, as well as solutions for controlling and managing mobile communication services at a central or local level.

The solution

Veolia Environnement has several thousand voice and data mobile communication connections from Deutsche Telekom in Germany, the Netherlands, Poland and Hungary. In numerous other countries, the company partners with operators from the FreeMove Alliance. In addition, Deutsche Telekom collaborates with Veolia in providing individual M2M solutions. A key focus is the area of mobile payments, for instance, for public transportation services. Deutsche Telekom supports such projects with its own know-how as well as through partners in other sectors, including international financial institutions.
